I don't mean to sound alarmist, but WHY would there be a version of IE that did not support a Microsoft VM???? It would be better to not distribute the IE Mac with Apple, and still persist our VM.

If we have a chance to get in changes before Tempo goes, we could install AFC.ZIP into the right folder for MRJ. This would require (a) testing on top of MRJ and (b) being able to get it done in time.

The IE Bundle license for Mac OS8 that we have with Apple doesn't include Java. That was one of the first things that came up in their specification, that we don't include our VM with IE and that IE will use the Apple MRJ by default. And that is what we have in place now, so I am not sure how this would apply.

I want to say in an AFC press release that AFC is the only set of java foundation classes that will ship on every copy of Windows and every macintosh.

what has been announced with apple about IE bundle? does it have terms under which we can update our bits to the,?
