The Antitrust Division is responsible for enforcing federal laws designed to ensure that our nation's markets are free and open to robust competition. The Division engages in both civil and criminal litigation, and its work ranges over the entire spectrum of the U.S. economy. Approximately two-thirds of the Division's attorneys are in Washington, D.C. There are also seven field offices located in Atlanta, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, New York, Philadelphia and San Francisco. These offices conduct the majority of the Division's criminal investigations.
