Congratulations are in order to those involved, representing the government, for having settled the litigation against Microsoft.

Creators of innovative products such as Microsoft need to be encouraged, in order to be motivated to "create". Of course the incentive to create and innovate provide "satisfaction" and "riches".

It's easy to get confused and say: It's OK to innovate and get rich, just don't get too rich or too innovative, otherwise, we will attack you. If we don't create and innovate in the U.S.A., another country will do it for us. Do you honestly think that if Microsoft would have been created in Japan, China or Germany these governments would have interfered with their success?

Fact, the Clinton Administration spent more energy, time and money in chasing and prosecuting Microsoft that they did on chasing the terrorists that bombed our embassies, USS Cole, etc. Now does this make sense?

Thank you for putting a stop to the nonsense on suing Microsoft for it's success and desire to be the best.
