The Microsoft Settlement is a setback towards fostering competition in the marketplace. Microsoft has used its monopoly powers to leverage licensing terms on its customers that are punitive towards users. The Windows product activation system is a violation of users right to privacy as a hash of users computer systems is sent to Microsoft. This is the most abusive company to its competitors I have ever seen and because of its monopoly powers it has been able to engage in such conduct unchecked. The only effective way to combat this problem is to split the Microsoft corporation into an operating system company, an office and other software company, and an internet company.
