January 23, 2002

Dear Sirs:

I do not believe that the Microsoft settlement, in its current state, will provide adequate recompense to those injured by the anti-competitive behavior exhibited by Microsoft.

From the time Microsoft was found to be monopolistic until today, their behavior has not changed. I only need to point to Microsoft's proposed settlement for their class action suit. What other company would seek to give schools the software which caused the suit to begin with?

I firmly believe that regulation of Microsoft's practices with strict penalties for non-compliance is the only solution which will stop them.

Thank you for your time,
