

From: Jonathan Kurtzman
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/25/02 1:35pm
Subject: Microsoft Settlement

Microsoft uses its control over the operating system to lock out competition by (a) preventing competitors from having the same access to the operating system as Microsoft applications have and (b) absorbing promising competitive fields into the operating system. The former means that such applications as Microsoft Office have significant competitive advantages. The latter means that potential competitors are deterred from entering into markets that Microsoft may then absorb.

Both of these are wrong.