Dear Ms. Hesse,

I am writing to you regarding you the Microsoft lawsuit. This lawsuit was brought against Microsoft by the federal government. During the course of this three-year lawsuit, the federal government has spent $30 million pursuing their case. The funding for the federal government's case comes from the taxpayers of this country.

This case has had its day in court. And the Court of Appeals has ruled to do away with the lower courts' plan to break up the company. Let's put an end to the lawsuit. At this point, spending any additional taxpayer money would just be sending good money after bad. The proposed settlement agreement is the only logical solution.

If this case is carried out any longer, it will only result in unnecessary increased expenses to consumers. I believe any additional public funds spent on this lawsuit are not being used for an appropriate cause. That is why I am asking that you move ahead with the settlement agreement without delay. The agreement will close the book on this overdone court case and allow us to move forward into the next century of technological advancements.

Thank you for giving consideration to my opinion.

Sincerely,

Kim Waltman
